

Narratives are a way of communicating with and engaging people in considering their own understanding of the world around them, and dominant narratives are the narratives that are held by many people at the same time and embedded in our norms. Transformative narratives can shift public consciousness and change what we view as problems and their solutions. Find more about the Narratives for Health project here.

Illustration credits: Yolanda Liman & Drawing Change