

Public Health Prepared is the new workforce development and public health practice branch of the Michigan Center for Infectious Disease Threats and Pandemic Preparedness (MCIDT), housed at and funded by the University of Michigan. We aim to build capacity among the infectious disease and emergency preparedness and response workforce and also work to build a feedback loop between research and practice.

Upcoming trainings in March will cover public relations for public health and strengthening community partnerships (registration coming soon). To stay up to date, sign up for our newsletter.