

Universal Testing Materials

Note: These materials will be shared with local health departments, healthcare providers, and partners once the Universal Testing rules are finalized.

Universal Testing Material	Audience	Purpose	New or Revised
Press Release	General Public	To inform the general public of new blood lead testing requirements.	New
Health Alert Notice (HAN)	Healthcare providers who care for young children.	To inform healthcare providers of new blood lead testing requirements and additional context as it pertains to physicians.	New
Q&A for Local Health Departments	Local Health Departments	To inform local health departments of new blood lead testing requirements and additional context as it pertains to local health departments.	New
Q&A for Parents/Public	Parents of young children and the general public.	To inform parents of young children and the general public of new blood lead testing requirements and additional context as it pertains to parents.	New
Q&A for Physicians	Healthcare providers who care for young children.	To inform healthcare providers of new blood lead testing requirements and additional context as it pertains to physicians.	New

Management of Blood Lead Test Results: Guidance for Healthcare Providers	Healthcare providers who care for young children.	To provide guidance on confirmatory and follow-up testing that aligns with new blood lead testing requirements and to provide an assessment to be used to identify high risk patients.	Revision (formerly Quick Reference for Providers)
What To Know About Blood Lead Testing	Parents of young children and parents of children who have had an initial elevated capillary screening.	To inform parents of what next steps may look like for confirmatory and follow-up testing that aligns with new blood lead testing requirements, and to provide guidance on how to lower the risk of lead exposure in homes.	Revision (formerly What's Your Child's Blood Lead Test Mean)
Universal Testing Factsheet	Parents of young children and the general public.	To inform parents of young children and the general public of new blood lead testing requirements and information on health problems from lead exposure.	New
Provider Brochure	Healthcare providers who care for young children.	To inform healthcare providers of new blood lead testing requirements and information on sample collection.	New

Know the Facts	Parents of young children and the general public.	To inform the parents of health problems from lead exposure and information on how to lower the risk of lead exposure in homes.	Revision
Is Your Child Safe From Lead Poisoning	Parents of young children and the general public.	To inform parents of the dangers of lead exposure, how to lower the risk of lead exposure in homes and to provide an assessment to be used to determine if a child may be at risk of lead poisoning.	Revision
Pregnant & Breastfeeding	Expecting parents and parents of young children.	To inform parents of how lead exposure may affect their fetus, tips for lowering lead exposure and to provide an assessment to be used to determine a pregnant person's risk of lead exposure.	Revision
Serve Up a Healthier Future	Parents of young children and the general public.	To inform parents and families of the importance of nutrition in protection from lead and to provide examples of sources of key nutrients.	Revision